

From the Police Department...

With the holidays approaching fast, what are you doing to keep your deliveries safe? With all of the online shopping and packages that will be delivered over the next 2 months, the Parowan Police Department has 6 easy and simple tips to help keep your deliveries safe this holiday season.

- 1. Don't let your packages sit. Monitor when your packages are expected to arrive. Leaving your packages on your porch or in your mailbox overnight or for a couple of days is an open invitation to thieves.
- 2. Talk to your neighbors. If you have a neighbor who is home during the day, consider asking them to collect your package(s) on the delivery date. More than likely, they'll be willing to help which can eliminate some holiday stress for you.
- 3. Ship to an alternate address. Consider shipping your packages to a friend or relative's home, or right to the gift recipient.
- 4. Ship to the store. Some retailers allow you to ship to a store near you. While this isn't always convenient, it does provide security and peace of mind.
- 5. Signature on delivery. If possible, consider having your packages delivered only when someone is available to sign for them.

6. Insure your holiday packages. Be-cause package theft increases around the holidays, it may be wise to insure your packages this time of year. This way, if your package is stolen, you can be reimbursed for your loss.

Our hope is that implementing one or more of these safety techniques can keep your packages safe and give you peace of mind during this hectic holiday season.

Enjoy the 2021 holiday season and may all your deliveries make it safe and sound to their destinations.

Early Pottery Production in Parowan

By: Sandra Benson

Common with every LDS set~ tlement, Parowan's earliest pioneers scoured the land, ascertaining the availability of natural resources to be harvested and shared with others near and far. Any resource that would lift burdens and enhance the quality of frontier life was valued as a blessing from heaven. One blessing in this area was the discovery of clay deposits in the east hills above Parowan Valley.

But let it be known that the pioneers' discovery of clay deposits came far later than that of the Fremont/Native American find. Jim Guymon, a local history enthusiast, shared information found in Traces of Fremont, authored by Steven R. Simms. Herein it states, "The Parowan Valley (literally centuries before pioneer arrival) seems to have been a pottery center as vessels made of Parowan clay have shown up in great frequency across the west deserts of Utah and eastern Ne~ vada." Mr. Guymon also shared his e-mail communication from Richard Talbot, Director of the Office of Public Archaeology. That communication said, "The core production area known as the Snake Valley pot~ tery is manufactured in the Paro~ wan Valley. And how do archaeologists know this? It is a well-crafted pottery, better in quality than elsewhere in the Fremont area."

So, while the pioneers were certainly not the first potters in the valley, they set in motion plans to reintroduce the manufacturing of quality clay items that would soften life in the area's harsh environment.

In 2009 ~2010 Tim Scarlett, as~ sociate professor of archaeology at Michigan Technological University was teaching Industrial Heritage and Archaeology. He had written his doctoral dissertation on Utah frontier pottery. He and a handful of students came to Parowan to literally "dig up" our pioneer history of clay, pots and potters. Their discovery hinged on an archaeological dig on the Thomas Davenport pottery site located on 1st South 85 West. Within his research, Scarlett stated, "The only identified commercial pottery industry west of the Mississippi River and east of California prior to 1869 (prior to the railroad) was located in Parowan." Of course, this only references the whiteman's frontier. Scarlett's dig and discovery project took two years lett recognizes that Thomas and his to complete but a great deal of nostalgic evidence of Parowan's pottery production was uncovered. The buried and forgotten kiln along with a great many tools, building foundations and broken pottery were uncovered. Local residents were invited to come and see and have Mr. Scarlett explain, as he saw and interpreted Parowan's pottery industry first failing and then succeeding.

This struggle is validated in Davenport family histories as they memorialize their ancestry. Thomas Davenport came to Parowan in November of 1852, less than a month after arriving in Salt Lake City. His grandson, W.T. Davenport wrote in a widely distributed family history entitled "Thomas Davenport: His Life, History and Posterity a lengthy poem about Thomas's journey to Parowan:

At last they met, and Brigham said, "I'm looking for a man, One on whom I can depend, to go to Parowan. Now the job I've got lined-up requires a man like Job, of old, With patience and endurance, it's about like panning gold. You're the man I have selected, for I knew you'd be a sport, I knew your stock in England, our name is Davenport. Your job's to build a pottery and make some pots and pans

And dishes too, for all the Saints down in that goodly land." And Thomas Davenport's reply: "We'll go, then, and be glad too, and answer your great call. We'd better leave here right away or we won't get there by Fall."

Thus, Thomas Davenport's legacy in Parowan began. He unsuccess~ fully fired a kiln a year later, and again and again through 1856. The next year, however, he had some success and full success in 1858. In his blog site (http://utahpotteryproject.blogspot.com.), Scarwife, Sarah, were remarkable in that "They certainly got to be good potters."

Of course, the remaining descendants of Thomas Davenport and so many others know the story of Thomas Davenport, the Potter. He provided a greater quality of life in every household. He came to Parowan from Brampton, England where many early settlers worked in the potter industry.

Mr. Scarlett is quoted in a May 6, 2009 Spectrum news article with, "It's the archeology of work that he (Scarlett) is teaching. This professor uncovered the work ethics built into the very bedrock of Parowan's pioneer culture. Work, often through trial and error, is the foundation that establishes success.
